

Ali Karimi rebuffs national team call

Tehran Times Sports Desk

TEHRAN — The iconic Ali Karimi wrote a letter to the Iran Football Federation (IFF) on Thursday in which he said that he does not want to rejoin the national team.

The Persepolis attacking midfielder was expelled from the national team four months ago after criticizing IFF officials.

Iranian President Mahmud Ahmadinejad intervened to settle the dispute between Karimi and the IFF officials, but Iran coach Ali Daei didn't invite the player, nicknamed the Asian Maradona, back to the national team.

Daei eventually called him up to the national team one week prior to the must-win game against North Korea in the 2010 World Cup qualifications, following a series of superb performances by Karimi in the Iran Professional League, but he refused to rejoin the team.

"I am honored to have worn Iran's jersey over 100 times, but was discourteously dismissed from the national team. Today, I think the national team board will feel better without me. They will have to concentrate on qualifying for the World Cup, and I send them my best wishes," Karimi wrote in the letter.
